What if humanity's first contact with extra-terrestrials depended not on the brightest and best, but instead on a broken and homeless man? When his friends give up on him, Seth Derreny marches to a hilltop, demanding answers to the biggest questions in life – and a spaceship zones in on his cries.

Mr. Barton's writing [is] crisp, well-crafted, and to the point. It's not florid and it doesn't go into a lot of needless detail. Yeah, it's a tad geeky...[T]hat's part of what makes [it] so enjoyable - OJHeSay.com (USA)

...be in awe of the brilliance that is Trevor Barton, who is quickly making it to the top of my favorites list. - W.C. Bitner, Jr. (Netgalley reviewer, USA)
