BERTRAMS, GARDNERS

Is there one special person, some place, some time, to make our lives complete? How, in all the confusions of this world, could we meet? Ambreen and Jinhai, separated by so much, come together in a dance of interweaving destinies.

Jin can't put names to his emotions, but he knows they feel good. He feels, for the first time in forever, at home. He's lost count of the number of times he'd paused on curbs, watching homes from the outside, families in warm, brightly lit kitchens, laughing and talking in a way that he thought only existed in the movies. He would ache then, with a longing that tore holes in him, wondering why it is he was left out like this. What did he do that made him this way? Where did he mess up? Why was he alone? He spent nights by himself, begging in silence for someone, just anyone, to be with him – to want to be with him.
